WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1769.

The Letter subscribed A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY, AND SIGNER OF THE RESOLUTIONS, cannot yet be published, for want of Room.

I think it necessary to apologize to the public, for intruding upon their patience, in opposition to a man, whose performances, taken in the most favourable light, resemble the unnatural jumble of a library out of order.---It is the last time I shall put that excellent virtue to a trial.

To FREEMAN.

AS you have honoured me with your esteem, which I confess was more than I expected; I am puzzled, to find out the reasons, on which a man of your parts and penetration has founded that esteem; for, from your representation, I can have few of those qualifications, which could render my friendship acceptable to any person: and unless I have given you medicines, to force a respect, I shall be still at a loss.

I was always one of those, who are of opinion, that verbal criticism arises from the dregs of learning, badly digested: and from flashing Bentley, with all the lore of antiquity in his head, down to pidling Tibald and yourself, it is, at best, but a work of DULNESS.---Words are the counters of the wise, and the money of fools.---I will however inform you, that abilities depend upon an extent of knowledge, and a proper judgment to exert it. Without this judgment, knowledge serves only to make a man more troublesome. And wherever it is wanting, it arises from an error of the mind, not to be corrected: But, for your justification, it shall be a misfortune.

A man, whose reading is principally confined to a few Latin poets, with which unhappy wretches he is constantly pelting his adversaries, in defence of himself and of the English constitution, will stumble as frequently as a foundered jade. But a smart Westminster school-boy, would have known better, than to settle the theology of the ancients; because, his learning would teach him, it was a point they could not determine themselves. The Epicurean, the Sceptic, the Stoic, the Academic, with many other wise men, held tenets as widely different, as the Mahometan, the Atheist, or Deist; nay, the disciples of the same school embraced opinions incompatible with each other. Their religion was almost any thing, it was nothing. The philosophical works of Cicero, if you ever condescend to read plain prose, will afford you a compendium of ancient theology, which, when you have studied over and over again, will leave you in utter darkness: And I hope you are not ignorant, who was the sacred messenger, that for the first time declared, to bewildered man, the certainty of a future state: His very apostles, who attended him during his residence on earth, never imagined his kingdom was of another world, until he disclosed his divine errand after his resurrection.

As you have endeavoured to make me something worse than a Heathen, in the Heathen world; so you have gone out of your way, to prove me little better than one, among Christians. I have spent four years of my life under a very learned and venerable clergyman, who taught me, what many sound divines will teach you, that, although it would be the highest presumption in man, to pretend to give laws to an Omnipotent Being, yet it is not derogatory to his Divinity, to be directed by his own fixed decrees: Without the unalterable laws which he has given to motion, and which arise from his unbounded knowledge, the heavenly bodies would destroy one another: As a presiding Deity over man, his attributes are, mercy and justice: Without his own immutable laws of equity, flowing from his PERFECTION, he might be liable to the passions of his frail creatures. If you are desirous of having a proper idea of the Deity, I will recommend the first volume of the sermons of that great divine Dr. Clarke; and, if you can comprehend him, he will teach you more on this head, than Pope, and the crampt sense of all the poets in the world.

As you are endeavouring to confirm by obstinacy, what rashness and temerity first began, I shall not endeavour to convince you of the inconsistencies of your conduct. But I must say, if I was astonished at the attacks you have made on your countrymen, I am so far from being satisfied, that I am absolutely shocked at your attempt to clear yourself. And your recollection about the long-ear'd animal was a very lucky one: You extorted the innocent meaning of a gentleman, to accuse society of the most iniquitous intentions; and, when desired to prove it, a brilliant thought makes you burst into a laugh---and the difficulty is got over.

The vilest animals have sometimes been of infinite service to mankind. I have read, that the cackling of a flock of geese, once saved the Roman capitol, from the Gauls. The conspiracy of Catiline was discovered, by the leaky disposition of an infamous strumpet. And a clumsy Ass in a fable has extricated you from a dilemma, out of which your own wit never could have brought you.

You have frequently astonished me. But there is one accusation, which can hardly be forgiven, and which will not be believed. You have accused me, of setting the Mechanics against you. If it were true, I would despise myself. That person must have spent his time to very little purpose, who does not know, that Mankind in general, and particularly those in the middling and lower rank of life, bear contempt with less patience, than injuries of a grosser kind: And surely, when you degraded, to the utmost of your power, the trades which they followed, you could not expect less than to rouse their resentment. To these men, you have made a very awkward bow----Haughtiness will constantly lead men into scenes, which generally produce condescentions as ridiculous as they are unnatural.

You first accused the association, of taking upon them the powers of government; now they are sunk into confederates. Had you barely mentioned the word confederacy, you might perhaps have staggered some men: But, the very reasons which you have given, to prove what a confederacy is, proves likewise, it cannot be applicable to the resolutions.

The generality of the people of this colony, finding every thing at stake which is dear to freemen, have entered into an association, or confederacy, call it what you will. They have done it, with all the tenderness their distressed circumstances will admit of, beyond most colonies in America---yet they have offended.

To close the whole, and perhaps at the risk of bringing down your utmost severity on my head, for which you need not make any apology; I will suppose all you can desire---that the word ENEMY was given to the non-subscribers---that their characters were debased, by a publication of their names---that many were compelled, by the tendency of the resolutions, to subscribe---that the non-subscribers will suffer, in their property---that free men are restrained, in their free wills: I will suppose, even more than you have advanced: But, in truth, let it be remembered, they are ONLY suppositions. All good writers on Government, agree, that its powers, originally belong to society; and that they delegate this authority, under certain restrictions; which RESTRICTIONS frame a CONSTITUTION, for the security of THE WHOLE. And whenever this delegated authority threatens the safety of society, they will have a right to RESIST, and reduce it within its proper bounds. For this reason Swift says, that the Vox Populi Vox Dei ought to be understood of the universal bent and current of a people, not of the bare majority of a few representatives, which is often procured by little arts, and great industry and application.

Now, is it to be supposed, that the right of parliament, to lay duties on every article we import, can be acknowledged? As the exertion of this right, is contrary to the inclination of that society, who are affected by such an act of power; and as no act of the legislature doth, or can, oblige a free people to purchase those articles (because if such a law were enforced, the persons and property of the whole continent would be at their disposal) America has come to a determination not to purchase, it being the wisest, and only peaceable, Method she can take, to recover her liberty.

When oppression threatens desolation to a state, mankind will not be reasoned out of the feelings of humanity; nor will they strictly adhere to those political maxims which were intended to preserve it. Hume, the Scotch apologist for the Stuarts, who has spent his whole life in destroying the principles of civil liberty, and revealed religion, is OBLIGED to declare, that in the most absolute government, there is a degree of tyranny, beyond which mankind will never be brought to submit; and from this natural disposition to LIBERTY, it sometimes happens, that even in Turkey, the sultan is now and then dispatched with a silken cord: And the history of England shews, beyond that of any other country in the World, whenever a corrupt parliament or an abandoned ministry invaded, in an outrageous manner, the privileges of the people, that THEY never rested, until they had reduced the powers of government to ITS FIRST PRINCIPLES. Under such circumstances, mankind will exert those latent, though inherent rights of SOCIETY; which no climate, no time, no constitution, no contract, can ever destroy or diminish. And under such circumstances, INDIVIDUALS will always be found, who, from obstinacy, from an unfortunate idea of government, from caprice, from timidity, and many other causes, will cry out, against whatever Measures are pursued: But, when society are endeavouring to find REDRESS, against public oppression, THEY will disregard SUCH MEN; it is fit they should.---A virtuous citizen, whose conscience prevented him from entering into the schemes adopted, would secretly lament the times, and be SILENT.

Truth obliges me to acknowledge, that you shine equally in learning, in theology, in history, in politics, in poetry, in a knowledge of the laws and constitution of your country, in wit, in politeness, in satyr; but above all these, in CRITICISM. God forbid, it should be thought, I have the vanity to vie with you, in any one of your good qualities.

I have no ambition on this idle score.

And, lest I should bring myself under an imputation of this kind, I must now take my leave of you for ever, as a writer.

If you can feel any inward joy, for the unwearied diligence you have discovered in the blessed work you have been about; if you are satisfied the attacks are JUST, which you have made, on your countrymen; you are happy indeed, and I am content.---Youth is some apology, for most irregularities of the mind.

Farewell.
